I agree with Terry Whaley and her email. I do feel that with the closed burn area in our neighborhood we will start seeing more homeowners burning limbs and branches due to no other alternative. I feel the burn site closure needs to be reconsidered and limit the items to be taken. I feel that homeowners (With already built established homes) should be able to use the burn site to drop these small amounts of brush they may have at the burn site. With that said I feel entire lot clearing of new home construction should be prohibited as the builder of the home and lot clearing crew already figure in the price of haul off and have the capabilities to remove the large abundance of cleared material. I think this will deter brush burning on home sites. I also would like to say that building a home in whitewater is very expensive in the outrageous fees required. Almost 8K for water tap, $1500 for road impact fees, high dollar POA dues and now the taxes going through the roof. Having this dedicated burn site is a nice reward to some of these burdens.

Respectfully
Coy
